Some was a stored that the word of rapped on the stone and he turned around to me and says, "Mr. Steams, there is the damn things that is raining this country!"

[Prolonged laughter.]

Now the President is not ruining the Democratic party. And it is a base slander on the party itself to say that that straightforward, honest man can do so; or that integrity and honesty ever ruined any party. [Applause.] No, gentlemen, he is building up the Democratic party on foundations so firm that, as the President says, governships and Presidencies and all the good things of this land will be gathered to our bosom. [Renewed applause.] Now these people that find fault, I agree, make a good deal of noise. They appear to be all the world, and Dr. Watts tells us—

We cannot hear the shaking leaf When rattling thunders round us roll. When rattling thunders round us roll.

And so it is that we do not hear the little murmur that rings on the hillside and in the valley, from the counting room and the factory and the farm. But long after this din has passed away that constant song will keep on. [Applause]

How little a disappointed place-seeker counts. [Laughter.] It is said that a man with a personal grievance is the biggest nuisance in the world, and I certainly know from experience that a man with a personal political grievance is a bigger nuisance than cats at midnight.
